When it comes to loneliness, everyone has their own reasons and ways to solve it. Born in a family without siblings, I am often overwhelmed by a sense of solitary. Every when my parents are being occupied by their stressful works, I have nobody to share the intriguing events that happened in school. However, I will turn to my intimate friends to pour my thoughts and feelings. In spite of the fact that there are plenty of solutions to outlet my pressure and moods, I somehow still feel lonely from time to time. It is when nobody could understand my eccentric thoughts, my innovative ideas, and complicated feelings that I will feel lonely.

This kind of loneliness originates from the gap between my parents and me. I feel empty although I am actually surrounded by many people. The loneliness comes from the bottom from my heart, leaving me helpless and suffocating.

If there were a way to fill up the hole in my heart, it is "movie". When I watch movies, I will forget the lonely feeling. Movies are both physically and mentally beneficial to me. I am especially fond of watching comedies while feeling lonely. Firstly, they enable me to laugh hard, which can make me overcome the loneliness. Besides, sometimes, I find the characters share the same thoughts with me, I would sigh with relief, for realizing that there still are people who understand me. Last but not least, comedies never fail to soothe my heart and touch my soul. Movies are the best mate to accompany me whenever I feel lonely. A sense of happiness, an urge to look on the bright side of my life engulfs me after watching movies. Although movies don't have souls, they give me strength and make me hope again, making me ^{forget loneliness,} and turn into a better person in terms of both body and mind.
