According to the bar chart, we can clearly observe that there are almost seventy percent of the adults in America from eighteen years old to twenty-nine years old caring for the news of environment and nature disasters. From my point of view, it's probably due to the worsening problem of global warming. People nowadays are gradually realizing the gravity of this problem and starting to pay more attention to it. In contrast to the highest category, the news of art and culture merely accounted for a low thirty percent. While phubbing has become the most prevailing hobby for people to engage in in their free time, an artistic or cultural activity has become less and less popular. That is to say, people nowadays pay less attention to the news of art and culture; however, it's not a surprise to me. There are also other categories that worth mentioning, such as the social issue, ranked as the second place of the chart and accounted for sixty-four percent, and the third place, which is the international affairs, accounting for almost sixty percent. And the lower categories, such as the school and educational issue. However, the approximate fifty percent it accounted for has surpassed the lowest category, the art and culture by almost twenty percent. It's quite a huge gap.

As far as I am concerned, I personally pay attention to the news of entertainment and celebrities the most, which accounted for fifty-eight percent on the bar chart, ranked in an intermediate place. The reason why I'm into these news the most is perhaps owing to my gossipy character. I've always love to know every single detail of the love affairs between celebrities. Besides, when I was equipped with these news and informations, I can always have topics to chat with my friends and my family, for these issues are definitely good spices to add in a conversation. On top of that, knowing these news make me feel like I'm always following the trend. Thus, I will never be regarded as an old-fashioned person. By contrast to my favorite topic, the least favorite news to me are also the art and culture ones. I've never been considered an artistic person, whenever I was in the museum, the only feelings I got are boring and dull. That is, I will never bother myself to keep track of the art and culture news, in that I have absolute no interest in it. In a nutshell, my preference of news is quite matching with the one of the eighteen years old to twenty-nine years old adults in the USA. The only difference is that I prefer entertainment and celebrities coverages the most.
