According to the bar chart regarding the news categories which the youth have a tendency to show concern for, we could apparently know that news reports which are about natural and environmental disasters attract the most attention of teenagers, while pieces of news related to art and culture appeal the least interests, which account for 69% and 30% respectively. By observing the survey conducted by the American 18 to 29-year-old people, we could certainly infer that most of these respondents are more conscious of the incidents connected with environmental catastrophes and social issues. However, the news concerning the cultural and artistic events are not ignored on the grounds that there are still 30% of them keeping in touch with such subjects.

As far as I am concerned, among these six aspects of news stories, I have a preference for focus on the news about social issues which have a closer connection with me. The topics of the aging society are the ones I concentrate on. Based on the statistics, by 2020, the population of the elderly will have outnumbered that of children in Taiwan. Worse still, there will be one person aged over 65 in every five Taiwanese people in 2025. In that everyone would age with times, the serious problems of over-population in senior generation should be taken seriously. As for the topics I less follow, scandals of celebrities in the entertainment industry would top the list. Due to the fact that I consider those news to be the personal privacy of the known, I am not inclined to invade others' privacy just for the subjects talked for fun. No matter what kinds of news we would like to pay attention to, it's a good chance to broaden our horizons and get a deeper insight into the world by reading the news.
