

II.

It should have been a serene afternoon without the anniversary of the department store that drove the public crazy. The zealots of shopping awaiting outside the gate formed a long queue, which made the department store more akin to the last hope of humanity besieged by a bunch of zombies, what was more astonishing? As soon as the ring of inauguration went off, these people seeking for discounts rushed into the hall without any hesitation. Within seconds, the entire floor was clogged with treasure seekers, with smell of sweats and noise of rambling pervasive in the air. In addition, the metaphor citing zombies to describe these fanatics formerly might not be subtle enough after these shoppers started to quarrel, which zombies in the same ally would not resort to. These indignant people, triggered by someone else's interluding in line or the fact that their targets have become others' booties, swore loudly to their enemies, sparking several rough-and-tumbles. Furthermore, a group of youngsters even fought with another crowd of adolescents. The battle aggravated to the extent that their limbs were intertwined, and the guard eventually came to make this fight for discounts culminate in peace. Indeed, there were a big percentage of customers observing the rules, which would be the only merit that was visible in the boisterous and teeming scene.

However, just within a stroke of a pen, the forged serenity got broken by another pandemonium, which seemed much graver. A man veiled in black shouted to everyone that he possessed a bomb at hand, which jolted the crowds out of intoxication of shopping into fleeing. The man required the guard to stay away from him, or he would ignite the bomb to have everyone buried together. Looking temperamental, the man seemed to be serious, thus keeping the guard stationary. However, what the bomber did not know was that the guard had gone through several crucibles in a bid to become a part in FBI's special force. With only a glimpse of time elapsing, the guard swiftly ran to the man and took away the bomb. Now, the fact that the bomb crisis had been eased congregated the crowds back. Soon afterwards, the man got attested and the promoting event ended up with pleasure of safety.
