

=. It was a usual night to most people, but it was a nightmare to people living in the small town in the mountains. A strong earthquake hit the town that night. Most houses in the town collapsed due to the earthquake. Some collapsed immediately, the others were hit by the huge rocks rolling from the mountains. The fatalities are still increasing now. Some people are still under the debris, while the others ran out of the buildings. These people who survived the disaster burst into tears as soon as they saw their home not a house any more, but a pile of rocks.

Although the town is already a mess now, we still have to take hold of the time to keep looking for survivors. The government should also help the survivors to reconstruct their homes. Before the reconstruction, we should provide a temporary shelter for them, keeping them from the freezing weather outside the house. In addition, the new buildings should be strengthened in case of this kind of disaster happening again. People in other areas can help in some ways, such as donating food or money to the charities. The charities will send their love to the victims which will help them to get through this nightmare. I hope they can make it soon.
