

Mrs. Cullen was a single mother. She supported the family all by herself and made a living by running a restaurant. One day, as usual, her son Edward came to the restaurant for dinner and prepared to finish his homework as soon as possible so he could help out his mother with all the cleaning at the restaurant. Upon cleaning, Edward found a bag full of money on the chair. So surprised was he that he stood there motionless without saying a single word for a few minutes. Mrs. Cullen noticed his unusual behavior and came over to check on him. When she saw what Edward just saw, she stood there staring at the money with her mind breeding all kinds of evil plans, planning secretly to fulfill the dreams she never had a chance to realize. Meanwhile, the owner of the bag finally noticed the disappearance of his money. Standing at the train station, the man felt hopeless because the money was the ransom he just got by abducting a wealthy merchant's daughter. He put so many efforts on the kidnap plan and now it's in vain. He dared not to go back to the restaurant for fear that the owner of the store had already called the police. In the meantime, Mrs. Cullen finally set her mind on calling police instead of spending the huge sum of money. And the original owner of the money, the merchant, was so thrilled to see the money and decided to reward the Cullens. ✓
