Dear Ken,

The final exam is coming next week. Since I regard you as my best friend, I think I have to tell you the following words.

Do you remember that when we were in junior high school, we both worked very hard studying? We often prepared for big exams together in the library and cheered each other up. In our leisure time, we would go outside to play basketball or tennis. We even traveled together on vacation. In those days, I felt very pleased to be with you. All of the time spending with you seemed meaningful.

Recently, however, I found it hard to invite you to do anything.

I was curious about this initially, but soon discovered that you were seriously obsessed with video games. I even heard that your grade in class had fallen straightly and you were often blamed by your parents. As an intimate friend, I do feel very sorry to hear this. How I wish we can work hard together just like the previous days. In my opinion, video games are not bad things. But we need to enjoy it moderately. It will always be easy for us to stick to the games without doing anything else. And it is certainly not a good idea to give up all the things just to play them. By the way, there are also many interesting things we can do in our leisure time, such as playing sports or reading novels. So I think we should not be obsessed with the games that much.

In sum, I really hope you can get rid of the games and come back to the normal life. I will always be welcome to the diligent and friendly friend who I used to know.

sincerely yours,

Jack
