

I'd definitely go with the book Leadership Is A Choice: Conquer Your Fears & You Can Be a Leader Too. My guess is that the book is divided into two sections: "how to conquer fears" and "examples of leaders". In the first section, the author illustrates ways to make one more courageous and display one's charisma, such as actively participating in extracurricular activities and ceaselessly expanding one's social circle. In section two, the author renders the readers more insights into what it's like to be a leader by bringing up some of the greatest entrepreneurs in the industry. Apple's founder Steve Jobs, Microsoft's CEO Bill Gates, Facebook's creator Mark Zuckerberg, and Amazon's chairperson Jeff Bezos are undoubtedly included in this section.

There are an assorted array of reasons why I chose the book, one of which is that the leaders I listed above are all idols I've been trying to emulate. Thus, to this end I've been serving as a club officer in a volunteer club, scheduling and leading mission trips for one and a half year. I also took part in several internships, aiming to train myself to be the one that serves before morphing into the one that leads. With that said, this book would help me comprehend the word "leadership" better and really get me acquainted with those prominent leaders of today. To conclude, I'd like to address that for as long as I can remember, I've been craving to become a leader, a navigator that directs the whole crew of people, and I believe that under the auspices of this book by Austin Young, I'd eventually fulfill my aspiration someday in the future.

背面可繼續作答