If I have enough time, I would rather choose to read both of the two books. But if I could only choose one book, I would prefer the latter one, Leadership Is A Choice. Judging from its cover, there is a guy already coming through some stairs and climbing a ladder. Obviously, it shows that if we understand the topics mentioned in the book, we could get a better position, fulfill our dreams or something like that. Judging from its title, it would definitely discuss about the leadership, an ability that successful ones need to have. I think there will be numerous short stories in it, giving readers some examples who have conquered their fears and become leaders. Perhaps there will be some comments given by the author after the story, pointing out which is the key point that contribute to their success. Maybe the author even put his e-mail in the book, hoping readers to contact him and talk about individual obstacles they have met. At the end of the book, the author must offer a simple quiz to see if the readers understand what he has mentioned in the book and make appropriate decision when facing different difficulties.

The reason why I choose this book is apparent, leadership is such an extremely important capability that a successful businessman would have. Sadly, in most common education, there isn't any class given to teach students to learn the ability. To make the matters worse, we, the Taiwanese, tend to be less aggressive when comparing to the western. We are as ambitious as them, but when it's about the time to elect a leader, we always shy away and don't grab the opportunity. In my opinion, the way to overcome the fears in our mind is the key to the problem, and it's what we are going to learn in this book. But after being selected as a chairperson, leadership is no less important than bravery. Fortunately, it's also a topic that the book will let us know. Because I can become courageous and gain leadership by reading the latter book, I would choose Leadership Is A Choice as the book to read in my summer vacation.
