After days of pouring rain, there finally came the sunlight. Up in the azure sky, the torrid sun was burning the whole atmosphere without mercy. With immense zeal and elation filling my heart, I jumped off the stairs at the front door of our house, radiated a splendid smile on my face, and walked up to help Mom and Dad pack our stuffs for the family trip I had been looking forward to for so long.

"Adventureland", the theme park opening merely a few weeks ago, was our destination. Mom, Dad, and I were going to play to our hearts' content to shake off the shadows of the previous days of depression due to harsh weather.

However, no sooner had we set off for the trip than we were forced to face an irritating problem — traffic jam.

It seemed that every family was going on a family trip that all the roads were swarming with vehicles. We got stuck in the crowds of cars while there was nothing we could do about it. To make things worse, as we eventually arrived at Adventureland, what came to our first sight was huge crowds of people waiting in line for the entrance tickets. At the sight of this situation, our bubbles of dreams were burst in a fraction of a second. We had no choice but to cancel the trip and leave with a long, deep sigh.

With my heart sinking down to the bottom of my stomach, I was pondering how to get through the monotonous time of the day. All of a sudden, my mom rushed into my room and told me a shocking news, saying that an unexpected disaster had happened just a few minutes after we got home. At first, I only attached little credence to what she had said. Then I turned on the TV and found that it was true that the disfunction of one of the roller coasters had claimed lots of lives in Adventureland. Stunned and startled, we couldn't utter a word as our minds went blank. Subsequently, we sighed with both relief and sadness. Although we fortunately escaped from the accident, we still prayed sincerely in our hearts for the victims and hoped this kind of things wouldn't occur again.
