

If there is a chance for me to spend a day completely according to my own wish, and I can choose someone to go with me, I will choose to go to Hokaido, Japan with my parents, and I choose them all because of specific reasons. For my mother, who works day and night and never rests, I believe that her diligence and hard work is worth a vacation, and I am happy to invite her on this trip. As for my father, who is often busy dealing with business overseas and rarely spends time at home, I believe his job has brought more income to our family but has simultaneously weakened our relationships, and we really need to spend a day together, sharing our thoughts or even just a laugh or two.

The reason I choose Hokaido is simple — because we've been there before, and really had a great time back then! It was during a time when my mother didn't work more than eighteen hours a day, and my father didn't have to work overseas. This time, they can surely enjoy a day away from busy phone calls and piled up files! My father and I will first go skiing in the morning. We can discuss about this exciting sport that we both love, share special techniques about skiing, and even have a race down the mountains! My mom will go to enjoy the famous hot springs in Hokaido, which can relief her pain in her muscles resulting from too much work. Later in the day, I plan to let the three of us have a great supper together, when we can talk about everything we met in our parted lives, which is something that we really need! I will really cherish the day, for the day makes me believe that we are really a happy family!
