As far as I am concerned, the smell of books is the most elegant and delightful fragrance I've ever enjoyed in my life, and under no circumstances will I forget the first time I met it. When I was six years old, I stepped into a marvelous bookstore for the first time. Consequently, I was deeply intoxicated in the fabulous smell of the books. It was as if something in my heart was triggered, and a desire for knowledges soon surged up in my mind. As soon as my nose was filled with smell of books, I can not help but sit down on a comfortable sofa in the bookstore and make myself start to take pleasure in the world of books.

The smell of the books left an indelible impression on my mind, and hardly can I forget it. The reason is that the fragrant books seem to strike a chord with my heart. As I grow older, I found myself a man who loves reading, and not only does the books quench my thirst for knowledge but they also bring me with worlds full of imagination. From the first time I was basked in the smell of books, I knew I fell in love with reading.
