

When it comes to sports, the first choice which flashes into my mind is baseball. It takes a pitcher, a batter, a catcher, three defenders at each base, a short-stop player and three players respectively in left, central, right field. Each player is required to wear a hat and a glove which can prevent one from getting hurt when catching the ball. Also, even a batter needs to wear a glove, for hitting the ball may cause huge pains to one's wrist and disable one from continuing the hit. Playing baseball calls for a great space as a field, which has lush grass over it. With the above-mentioned implements and field, we can hold a nine-inning baseball game!

Back in the fifth grade in primary school, I met an enthusiastic fan of baseball, who later became my friend.

He not only introduced me baseball, but he also invited me to join his amateur team after I went to junior high school. On hearing his proposal, I delightedly said yes and then started my dedication to baseball. During a long period, I played it with other team members practically every weekend until the sun set. Through practicing together, we developed a close bond with one another. Gradually, I became extroverted and enjoyed getting along with others, which surprised both my parents significantly. Thanks to it, I was no longer shy and I learned the importance of teamwork by playing baseball. I will take it as a lifelong hobby in the many years to come, for it has benefited me so magnificently that I can't imagine my existence without it!
