    If I had a chance to win either an invisibility cloak or a pair of smart glasses, I would definitely choose the invisibility cloak. I prefer it over glasses for multiple reasons. First of all, Being invisible has always been one of my biggest dreams. I could do whatever I like without being noticed. An invisibility cloak could possibly cause problems if it lands in the hands of the wrong people. I am definitely against bad intentions, but little harmless pranks that would make people laugh would be acceptable. If I owned an invisibility cloak, I would probably use it to pull pranks on my friends, just to make life more exciting and fun. I would sneak up on them, poke them and make all kinds of sounds. I would love to see their faces when they turn around and see no one there. I have always loved to play pranks on people and getting an invisible cloak would definitely take it to the next level. In addition, the cloak provides protection from fire and water. You never know when accidents will happen, so it is always best to be prepared at all times. This cloak would definitely come in handy.

    On the other hand, while smart glasses are also a cool invention, I personally do not like them as much. These glasses enable people to see through things, which is something I have absolutely no interest in. Furthermore, these glasses serve as a camera and videotape everything you see. As much as I would want certain memories to stay forever, I would not want them to be kept anywhere else other than in the back of my mind. I hate getting flashbacks from things I do not want to remember and having those pair of glasses recording every detail makes it worse. For the above reasons, I would choose the invisibility cloak over the smart glasses without a doubt.
