I would choose a [✓] pair of smart glasses rather than the invisibility cloak. First, it would be convenient for me in class because I wouldn't be stressed out and jotting down notes with anxiety would be a thing of the past. This pair of glasses could help me record every lecture I took in school while I could pay full attention on my studies. Second, when going out for a trip in the mountains I won't be busy taking pictures with the help of the glasses. Overwhelmed by the imposing view, I could relax and feel refreshed. What's more, I could file these scenery into categorized documents and recollect them whenever I want without bringing a laptop with me. Last but not least, I would take full advantage of this product by effectively saving the breathtaking views and precious memories in life. Moreover, I would do my best to share my notes to those who can't catch up on their studies in class.

The reason I didn't choose the invisibility cloak is because it's too dangerous. Although I'm not the kind of person that would destroy things out of spite, I strongly disagree with the emergence of this product. Thieves can sneak in your house in the dark of the night while you return home late and steal from you without being noticed. People with bad intentions have the tendency to set out fire in public areas or lead the society into chaos without concerning being arrested. With these valid and threatening reasons concerned, never will I choose the invisibility cloak.
