

According to the picture, American students spend most of their time on sleeping and studying. In fact, though it seems that there is nothing different between Taiwanese students and American ones, it is definite that the substance of two kinds of schedule is totally different. In the picture, the pupils of America spend only six hours on studying and it is quite ridiculous in Taiwan since we not only stay in school for nine hours everyday but also go to cram schools after class and keep studying until midnight. Some hard-working people may even burn the midnight oil and this kind of behavior will not happen in America. Moreover, they have four hours to socialize and relax which Taiwanese students don't even dare to imagine about because of the tough burden of schoolwork and the harsh pressure of parents' expectations. Therefore, we seldom have the leisure to relax ourselves in order to reach the goal of enrolling in prestigious universities and ensuring the bright future. Furthermore, they can sleep for almost nine hours. This is just too astonishing to believe. American students are sometimes more brilliant and creative than us, but they sleep so long and we just consider sleeping as a waste of time. Given what I have mentioned, their daily schedule is much more flexible and relaxing in contrast to our busy one.

As far as a Taiwanese student is concerned, I, of course, consider studying to be my first priority. To me, there is nothing important than cultivating my ability and broadening my knowledge. As a result, I spend more than ten hours on reading, which is definitely different from American students. In addition, I deprive plenty of sleeping time and leisure in order to utilize my time in the most effective and efficient way. Therefore, there is no time for me to do part-time jobs or voluntary works. The schedule, though, is absolutely intensive and depressing, I convince myself that all the efforts will repay me with a bright and promising career. I forsake the time to play, give up the time to sleep, and even prohibit myself from relaxing. The whole schedule of my daily life is to ensure a wonderful life.
