

According to the statistics provided, we can find that it is very important for American students to have a sound sleep since the time they spend on sleep is the most. They spend eight point seven hours sleeping, which is very different from Taiwanese students' habit. We spend less time sleeping than they do. We Taiwanese students spend almost nine hours studying at school and more at home, while they spend only six point four hours on learning. As we see, social activities and leisures play an essential role in their daily life. From this, we can infer that they emphasize these activities very much. Also, they work part-time for one and half an hour. Some of the students in Taiwan do so, while the other don't. There are several differences in daily routines between American and Taiwanese senior high school students.

Take me for example. I always spend six hours sleeping, from eleven p.m. to five a.m.. The competition is so fierce in Taiwan society that I must exert myself to study hard. Therefore, it takes me almost a day to study in order to get high scores on tests. However, health is important to me because one can achieve nothing without a healthy body. Thus, I always jogging for half an hour everyday after school. I consider social activities and relationships among people crucial, too. But I spend only an hour for them, avoiding being distracted by them. It is obvious that I spend much of my day on learning than the American students do. Being as my daily life might seem, I feel happy since I can learn a lot of new things and spend lots of time with my family.
