It never occurred to me how demanding it was to educate a child, or let's say, simply keeping a child from bumping around and damaging things. I finally had a taste for it when I signed up for "The Greenlights Plan," which aimed at teaching some elementary schoolchildren after class. The place was set in a church and those kids, who often came from shattered families, were low achievers in academic performance and were not willing to learn. I was assigned to teach Jimmy, a fifth-grade student who excelled in sports, mathematics and Chinese. At first,

I expected myself being a gentle tutor, yet as time went by, my passion faded and I did not see any possibility of leading him to the wonderland of knowledge and words. For weeks, I felt frustrated and was even reluctant to face Jimmy. And one day, when he was again hoofing around and I was lost in my trance, he patted my shoulders. "It's my fault. You are good enough," he comforted me, "but don't worry, I'll be okay." I literally have tears formed around the corner of my eyes.

I think I was the one who was educated in this session. I learned about patience, about tolerance, but most important of all, about loving someone and demanded nothing in return. Despite the fact that I failed my task and we had departed, he remained the sparkling star in my heart. I came to understand that life has its own way, and there are things in life that cannot be denied, such as the beauty of human nature.
