

(三) Intoxicated in the warmth of music, I was dreaming one day I could play guitar and stand on the stage too. To quench my thirst for playing guitar, I turned to my music teacher — Mr. Lin, who was a talented guitar player and was the leader of a indie band. First, he taught me basic skills such as playing C chord. Receiving these radical skills, all I had to do was permanently practicing. Under the guidance of Mr. Lin, I progressed by leaps and bounds. One day, he told me the touching of the music didn't lie in perfect skills but in the feelings deep from my heart. From then on, I focused on what I felt in music instead of constantly polishing my skills. Mr. Lin not only improved my skills but also helped me surmount the adversities.

From this experience, I learned that it needs a lot of patience to be a good teacher to help students master a skill. What's more important, teachers should stimulate students' imaginations and creativities instead of always giving them knowledge. It's Mr. Lin that helped me think independently and let music strike a deep chord with me. Grateful for him, I would pass this passion of music to my students in the near future!
