If my school were to organize a community event, I would choose the first proposal and provide my community with services for the elderly. My reasons for this choice are both subjective and objective. Firstly, my grandma is 88 years old and has been diagnosed with dementia. Even though my family consists of two parents and two kids who take turns caring for her, it is still exhausting for all of us. Because of my personal experience,

I know how many families are in desperate need of someone to share their burden. Secondly, long-term elderly care has been an increasingly important topic in recent years. My mom is a professor who specializes in this area, and has even participated in developing policies regarding this issue. She has often spoke of how we are lacking in personnel willingly to go into the homes of the elderly to care for them. Thus I believe that the first proposal will be of great benefit to my community.

I believe that the services for the elderly should include three parts: food, exercise and social interactions. Most caretakers have jobs of their own and can't hire professional help. Thus the elderly have no one to care for them during the day. We would go to the families in need and provide the elderly with healthy meals. Then, if the elder is able, take them out for a walk. Lastly, we will be sure to engage them in conversation to keep them company. With these services, I'm sure that not only ^{the} lives of the elderly will improve, but also the atmosphere of the community as a whole.
