If I could have an opportunity to hold a community activity, I would certainly opt for holding a market featuring second-hand goods, cultural items or produces, etc. As far as I am concerned, there would ^{be} many advantages of the market. First and foremost, students could accumulate unique experiences for being an one-day clerk, which could help them realize how to interact with customers properly. Secondly, holding the market could also help promoting local organic produces and healthier life style, which could to some extent increase the life standard of contemporaries ^{who} live in the concrete jungles. Last but not least, the activities could also make participant more appreciative of diverse culture, and thus enhance the harmony of the community, even the entire society.

As for the schedule of the activity, I would recommend that the process be meaningful as well as joyous. Besides the display of several cultural items or man-made artifacts, some experts or the owners of the items would be invited to elaborate on the procedures of making the ingenious masterpieces. There would be some extra discount for buying the second-hand items. It is the customers' participation that can help decrease the amount of the potential wastes. At the end of the markets, I would also invite some guests or participants to deliver their feelings toward today's activities. I hope that this could make people reflect on themselves and engage in doing something better to improve the society.
