Schools are essential places for learning new things, and many people also develop their personalities through school education. As you can see the importance of what schools bring us, it's also important to learn how to protect the schools we have. Recently, there have been many cases of drugs infiltrating into schools. More and more teenagers or even kids are in touch with these hazardous products, and furthermore affecting the way they think or how they act. Influencing others to join them on this bad choice road. Another problem with schools is that there have also been multiple cases of people breaking into schools. One of the more serious cases I've heard of, is that a criminal once broke into a school and abducted a girl, the police spent much time rescuing her, and the whole situation

Caused much drama on the internet. Last, and probably the most common, is bullying. Each year, many people at school suffer from bullying, which often leads to some tragic endings such as suicide or in some cases in America, school shooting. With all these problems posed toward schools, it is everyone's duty to stand up and try to prevent these disasters from happening.

As a student myself, the duty seems even more important, for that all these problems might someday fall upon me. For the drug problems, I believe that school authorities should more often lecture students of the negative effects they may pose once using them, making students more alert of how dangerous drugs really are. Then for the problems of intruders at school, I believe advancing the security systems at school could do the right trick to lower strangers from breaking in. And as for the problem of bullying, that is the case all students have to work together to prevent things as such from happening. We all need to learn how to treat others kindly and learn how to except differences. Only by doing so can students get along more easily with others and lessen the chance of any sort of bullying. I have been following these rules as strictly as I can, and I hope others can do so as well. Therefore, with all the other improvements, we can make schools a safer place for studying and learning.
