

Protecting the safety of the campus from being undermined is the responsibility for every member in the school. I'm convinced that the security of the campus can't be over-emphasized. Below are some reasons why I stress its importance. First, bullying poses a serious menace to students at school. Students may suffer from some malicious words, deliberate behavior, and so on with an eye to excluding them from enjoying the school's life. Second, sexual discrimination, racism, and so forth are also urgent for us to take heed of. I believe that such measures to intentionally tell students apart are more likely to bruise students' ego or confidence. They may gradually be weary of going to school. Finally, strangers showing up in the campus, put students and teachers in jeopardy. Since we don't get a grip on their purpose, faculty and students may be hurt to some degree if strangers outdo something.

The methods we can take to enhance the level of safety in campus are as follows. To begin with, we can organize various kinds of educational programs to raise students awareness about the dimensions of bullying or uttering some words with discrimination. I am left the impression that as long as students are aware of the seriousness, they are capable of taking care of others' feelings and improving the relationships among others. Second, safeguards can play a crucial role in the safety of campus. They are at the forefront to refrain strangers from entering the campus. Once they devote themselves to their jobs, the safety must improve by leaps and bounds. Therefore, we can cultivate their responsibility for protecting the campus so that we no longer need to be worried about the security in campus. In conclusion, I believe that there are thousands of approaches of shielding the campus. The methods I mentioned above are the iceberg of them, but no matter which methods are, we all are trying our best to protect the campus.
