

2. According to the picture, we can see it is a massive land planted with rows of pleasant flowers. This is not an unfamiliar view to us, especially during spring when it is time that all flowers open in a full blossom. However, what we see in the picture is not people lining up beside the farm to merely enjoy the splendid scenery; instead, numerous visitors are creating chaos because of neglecting the sign just in front of them. Right next to the farm stands a sign, which clearly demonstrates that visitors are welcomed to take pictures of the flowers, but stepping on them or injuring them are absolutely unacceptable. Nevertheless, some careless people still step onto the land at their will, not caring how many flowers are damaged under their feet; others enter it due to a closer touch with flowers, or wanting to leave an impressive photo with the flowers that can be updated on social media afterwards. What these visitors have done is truly unagreeable, and even sets a negative example for others to follow.

As an visitor, I totally do not support these kind of rude acts, and the reasons are as follows. First of all, this seriously affects others' rights of enjoying the picturesque landscape. Damaged by careless visitors, those flowers will soon wither as they are too delicate to withstand any impulsive press from the surroundings, not to mention a person's single touch. Therefore, people who arrive later will only be left with a dying scene of flowers, and who feels delighted after seeing such an inactive view? Moreover, some visitors may follow former people's footsteps to intrude the land. Even if rules are written clearly on the sign, people may soon behave badly if they observe others have already violated the rules. Without an instant punishment pressed on them, visitors will take it for granted to appreciate flowers in a closer distance, and even draw more people to behave as they are permitted to act like this. Last but not least, farmers may become frustrated after these irretrievable damage, giving up to maintain the overall view of the land. Even though how hard a farmer have strived to take care of the flowers, they will become injured again and again. In the long term, farmers may get disappointed and fail to maintain the view for visitors who came later on. In my opinion as a visitor, I sincerely hope that people can all behave as an educated person, and remember to play their role well to ensure others' equal rights to enjoy the stunning views of flowers. As a result, all people can create and indulge in the pleasant atmosphere created by those flowers.
