The picture shows a field of blossoming flowers and unfortunately, quite a lot of people are trampling over the poor flowers, utterly ignoring the conspicuous red letters on the enormous sign that clearly states, "Do not enter the field and trample over the flowers!" The visitors seem to have only seen the first sentence, which invites tourists to take pictures of the gorgeous sea of flowers, and have all blatantly ignored the following request. this beautiful field of blossoms. Moreover, I have grown a deep affection for these flowers, as I have spent countless hours taking care of them, from watering them with care to fertilizing them with love, and to see these people trample over them as if the flowers are only a beautiful backdrop for their photos, I am truly disgusted by their outrageous behavior. Not only did they completely neglect the sign I put up to prevent something like this from happening, they've also shown that they do not have a sense of responsibility when it comes to preserving nature. What saddens me the most is that none of them appealed to their conscience and stopped others from destroying my beloved field. Instead, they just assumed entering and ruining my field in order to take a few pictures is allowed since everyone else is doing it. After seeing this, I am forced to build a fence around my field to shield my precious blossoms from the compassion-lacking public. It has never been my intent to stop people from admiring such a wonderful view but the circumstances have left me no choice but to do so.
