The picture shows an outdoor field covered by various kinds of blooming flowers, which is indeed a delightful scene to behold. Apparently, these lovely flowers are surely adored by their owner to such an extent that he/she has to set up a warning sign in the hope of protecting the plants from<sup>the</sup> feet of the tourists. However, though the intention of the owner is clearly written on the sign, people still seem to simply ignore it and step on the flower beds without being aware of how fragile they can be. Tourists joyfully stroll around in the field, taking pictures and having a good time, while the poor flowers are mercilessly trampled all over under their shoes. The warning sign, sadly, is obviously not an effective method of stopping people from entering the field and destroying the beautiful flowers planted there. The plants might even end up being dead thanks to the tourists' ignorance and carelessness.

If I were to view such a scene from the perspective of the owner of the flowers, I would be very upset and furious for sure. For fear of my precious plants being stepped on by intruders, I set up those warning signs to convey my concern. Yet, instead of a unharmed flower bed splendid as always, I get a messy and chaotic garden left behind by tourists. What an unforgiving deed those visitors did! Being the caretaker of the field, I will be in such a rage that I just decide to close the entire garden for good. It is a shame that how unthoughtful people can be when they care nothing but their own happiness, therefore I should put my property as my top priority and keep tourists away. Without a doubt, as someone who has the first-hand experience, I totally agree that we should all have some sense of morality imprinted in our minds. Or else, there will be more and more of my flowers being killed by rude visitors once again when I'm done cleaning this sheer mess!
