

In this fast-changing society, parks are undoubtedly crucial to people's lives, offering places for people to relax. However, park A and park B feature different characteristics and functions. First of all, as for park A, it might be a paradise for children and parents. With slides, tunnels, and all of the diverse facilities, the park enables children to spend all day long playing! What's more, since the ground is covered with black cushions, parents do not need to worry much about their children's safety. That is, park A is definitely a top choice for children and parents. As for park B, it is characterized by its natural scenery. For fervents who love to enjoy outdoor activities in the nature, park B is certainly a good place to go. Shuffling through the shadows between the trees and enjoying the pleasant sunlight, people could relax and take in the picturesque scenery. What's more, visitors could also wander around the ponds while glimpsing the amazing water creatures. To sum up, park A may be apt for vigorous children while park B is a great choice for nature enthusiasts.

As far as I am concerned, my ideal park boasts the three following features. To begin with, regarding its appearance, I prefer it to be rather natural without too much ornaments and artificial facilities. Only in this way can I relax and enjoy the nature thoroughly. Secondly, there should be an immense area covered with grass in my ideal park. Therefore, I could either sit or lie on the grass, totally absorbed in the gentle embrace of the nature. Furthermore, me and my friends could also held a picnic and savor the tasty dishes on the grass. Last but not least, there could be occasional music concerts held in the park. While submerged in the melodic music, I hope to seek a shelter from the nuisances in my everyday life. Above all, not only is my ideal park a place to embrace the nature, but it also serves as a remedy for me to restore energy for my future life.
