

二、英文作文 【請用黑色墨水的筆作答】

When it comes to typhoon dayoffs, people may engage in different activities. On the one hand, some may seize the opportunity to enjoy these "precious" and "fortunate" dayoffs. They view typhoon dayoffs as a perfect time to relax and respite amid days of hard work. People may turn to indoor recreations, such as going to the movies. In the picture, crowds of people are waiting in line at the counter of a movie theater, excited about the movie they are going to see in a minute. In addition to watching movies, people may engage in diversions including working out at indoor gyms or binge-watching TV series at home. These indoor activities serve as sources of entertainment and relaxation, also sheltering people from the blazing storm. On the other hand, typhoon dayoffs do not necessarily mean that all outdoor activities come to a halt. People with certain jobs, including food delivery services, would still continue their work in spite of the terrible weather. On the street, a few cars and motorcycles can still be seen navigating through the torrential rain; other objects such as shop signs, trees, power cables, and traffic lights would be prone to destruction as they withstand the endless strong blasts of winds. The given picture also exhibits the blurry vision caused by typhoons, which can put road users in peril.

In my opinion, I like typhoon dayoffs, and I have two reasons. Firstly, these dayoffs can ensure our safety. Although there are multiple times that the weather was fine on typhoon dayoffs, there's no denying that staying indoors can minimize the risk of getting injured. Apart from these, a dayoff means that I can manage my time freely, which significantly makes me less pressured and more relieved. Drawing from my previous typhoon-dayoff experiences, I can honestly say that they are both beneficial and necessary. Like most people, I woke up naturally, enjoy a self-made brunch, watched TV, and finish homework and studies from school. Having the chance to do tasks at my own pace indeed enhanced my efficiency.

Meanwhile, I frequently checked weather reports. Aside from keeping up with the weather details, knowing that some people had gone missing or had been left homeless always broken my heart, which also reminded me that I was lucky enough to be sheltered from danger. This not only strengthens my desire to give a helping hand and donate money, it also makes me build up sympathy. All in all, I think that typhoon dayoffs can ensure my safety, give me a time to relax, and last but not least prompt me to reflect on what I own and cherish what I have.
